Getting ready for the Holiday Season is very hectic, and finding a quite, personal moment to reflect on all the past year's sucesses and failures is very difficult.

Just in Time for Christmas!

So many men

...so, little time.

What special treat do you have in mind for a really meaningful relationship this Holiday Season?

There are moments of reflection, but they are fleeting. The past doesn't really matter... it seems like a distant novel of something that once was, but will never be again.

Intimate apparel is the most personal gift you can give to someone who shares the most intimate parts of your life.

Rx for Xmas blues is sharing your most intimate feelings with that special someone who means so much to you.

And don't forget to put something under the tree for Santa before snuggling under the covers!

Are Women Better

...more and more corporations are asking that question right now!

On Top?

Most women soon discover the fact that .."You don't have to be 'butch to be corporate material.

The day of decision! But then, isn't every day a day of decision for the young woman who is competing, and successfully, for power and influence in what has always been a man's world?

In this particular instance, the news Media, so long dominated by the giants of preparation and presentation of the news, has been invaded by a young woman of outstanding skill and determination, just one of the very many making their presence felt in the world of today.

Marlene McClain achieved her position indeed through much skill and determination, and willingness to devote her time and devotion for the power so long denied the female gender. Too high a price to pay? Perhaps! But so many are now willing to pay that price.

Miss McClain must provide much of the content of the evening newscast. What she provides must be cutting and current, and, if and when possible, scooping all competition, casting shadows of coming events.

As she can predict and provide the most pertinent information, the interviewees who will be in tomorrow's headlines, she gathers power to herself. No nine to five job, this! Rather, start early, and continue until done.

Miss McClain's objective is to provide this, all this, in time for inclusion in the 11:00 P.M. News! She is representative of so many intense, devoted, capable young women of today, who are accumulating power and influence in ways, and quantities unknown a generation ago. Even more, she not only provides, but she presents! Her face is already well known to the millions of News viewers. The heady realization of the power that she wields makes up in part, perhaps, for the relatively lower income her great efforts provide. Millions of young women today reach for the stars, although the trip is often in the economy class. But, the acquisition of power is heady stuff.

The tide of feminism which swept the 60's, the gains made by affirmative action in succeeding years, provide the ladder up which the young women struggle from anonymity to become familiar faces in every living room, or, in industry, at board meetings, and certainly the professions.

That a large proportion of the viewing world, the buying world, is made up of younger people, also has its impact. The inclusion of bright and attractive young women in those positions of power and influence broadcasts a message: "We are with you! We are

The corporate woman is special. She needs both the excitement and challenges of the business world, and the fulfillment of her own intimate desires.

Every corporate woman is constantly questioning whether her relationships with her corporate peers is "real" or just pretend.

for you!" So they reach out to the younger world, with its greater buying power, political power.

Politicians, always attuned to the popular response of people, also like to have these starlets in prominent positions on their staffs, and so, the distaf continues to make great strides!

This young woman's power is so obvious, that many who have already made their marks, who have accumulated their own modicum of fame, wish to add to their store by association. It becomes easy for her to reach the prominent, the famous, who consider it effective to their own careers, to be in such company! The situation, however unlikely a few years ago, now pays dividends to all concerned.

Success doesn't come with ease, even so. This world of imminent deadlines, cut-throat competition, creates an atmosphere in which mistakes are easy to make, and often embarrassing. Subjects so carefully selected for their intelligence, their attainments, may suffer stage-fright as easily as a school-boy, leaving silence on the air, or the stage, at the worst possible times. Equally embarrassing may be the task of tactfully informing someone of importance, that regardless, they will not make ideal guests. Never-the-less, ambition is ample to hurdle even these difficulties.

Needless to say, these skills are not gained in a moment, or as a magical result of graduation exercises. Coming events often cast their shadows before, and many of these young people obviously have their foot on the first rung of the corporate ladder, long before completing high school. Their energies, their questing, often place them in the forefront of all high-school, and such activities later make them choice selections for those very positions of power they desire. Such activities become even more evident during their college years, when visions of sugar plums of power and success begin to dance in their heads.

Their first sallies into the job market are seldom based on immediate income, but rather on those areas of experience that will best serve their over-all purposes. Their watchword is not efficiency but "outstanding efficiency". They provide themselves with at least one area of expertise, and market that to best advantage. Their one claim on the power they desire is their excellence in some facet of their career world. It becomes the weapon, the claws they need to reach for the top, and sustain their gains. That, and boundless energy and purpose.

The entire marketplace, whether it be concerned with production, power, influence, or creativity becomes their field of action, and their expertise and energy make greater and greater inroads into the traditional power structure. Their finger on the pulse of the young active people guarantees them their status, if they have the talent and the will to achieve it. And they so often do!

Advertising provides an ideal environment for the ambitious young woman also, for there her proficiency is reflected in dollars and cents for her employers. But the stresses, the strains, are no less for that. Her evaluations must provide the ideal sales medium and impulse for her product. A bad judgement can be near fatal to her hopes.

The power, the appeal, the influence these young women often have is frequently attributed to their youth, when actually it occurs in spite of their youth. Smart, self-confident, ambitious, they successfully negotiate the dangerous currents of business and politics, making themselves indispensible in their chosen fields of endeavor.

They are still aware, however, that they lack the experience to make a well seasoned judgement in all cases. That is their insurance against over-confidence, and at least some of the mistakes that could negatively influence their careers. They must constantly walk a line carefully between humility and aggressiveness, and still get the job done quickly, efficiently.

Some articles written about corporate women have failed to address the real issues of intimate feelings that naturally develop when men and women spend so much time together in a close working relationship.

For the young woman of skill, talent, ambition, today's world offers rare opportunities for the attainment of power, positions of consequence. That these positions may not be immediately highly remunerative, is offset by the power they bring, and power is often its own reward. Who, having tasted power, can equate it with anything else?

When interviewed, a few of these young women regret the choice which catapulted them into the arena of public power. Smart, attractive, ambitious, they are capable of assuming these roles in the power structure despite their youth. There must, however, be moments of pause, when they are dealing with representatives who are old enough to be their parents, and the knowledge that the outcome of their dealings may be of great consequence to these people. Even the ambitious know moments of humility, when they pause to realize the potential effects which they may have. Their responsibilities are very real. Even so, many young women today choose to climb this particular, difficult ladder to success, and in the process, build enviable careers for themselves.

Whatever the future holds, we may be sure that the distaf is on the way up. Smart, efficient, fiercely ambitious, they will continue to make their marks in the world of today. It has been said that there is always room at the top, and the top seems to be their destination. Certainly, power has its attractions, perhaps greater than the acquisition of early wealth.

There are many of these young women today; there will be more. And, whether we watch their rapid and consequential rise in the contemporary world with admiration or dismay, we may be very sure that a trend has been established which will continue in the foreseeable future.

COMMANDO

A sultry soap opera not yet ready for release for public viewing, an avenue on the uncharted path down lover's lusting lane, or a walk on the wild side. No matter what you may wish to call it — Sexual Fantasies —are an erotic means of foreplay that are utilized by partners to strengthen a relationship and re-kindle romance. These fantasies are a gateway to rationalization of your partner's desires and inner-most thoughts. They allow you to reach a side or a part of you that may have not been explored and may never, ever be explored by any other means other than a Sexual Fantasy. Just entertaining the thought of acting out your wildest dreams (of which everybody has) or your most daring, inner-most thoughts is sexually arousing. You may feel your sex life is more than adequate and you don't need any more exploration into your intimacy. Well, then ask yourself, are you more of a pragmatist than a romantic? A survey of marriages revealed that after the first year, the biggest concession was sex. Most couples agree that romantic love is omnipotent to a lasting, healthy relationship. The biggest problem is that there is a split in personality by one or both partners. Either one becomes pragmatic and the other romantic or they both become pragmatists. It's as if they said, "Well the honeymoon's over — now get to work!"

Hey commando, "shoot when ready!"

It's time to want a progressive lifestyle and work is a big part of that, but what about your personal life? Are you so busy paying the bills or planning how to decorate your world that you forgot how to be Romantic? Susan explains: "I remember meeting Tom at a college "frat" party. We were both wildly drunk and wanted to have fun. We had sex outside against the house, it was wild and exciting. I can remember every detail even though I was that drunk!". Susan makes an interesting point. How many sexual encounters stand out in your mind? We bet it's the wildest and the most romantic and daring encounters of your lifetime! Rick was one of the many men we questioned, his sexual experience is quite proficient; however, Rick has his favorites. "I remember Julie, she was the wildest woman I had ever met! She taught me most of what I know about pleasing a woman and then some! "I'll never forget the first time she tied me to her bed and gave me head with a mouth full of ice cubes. I was tied, spread eagle and couldn't move a muscle. I was helpless to do a thing. I was totally at her mercy. It was frightening at first and I struggled to get loose. Julie did things to me that night that I'll never forget!

What are your favorites? Everyone has memories of past sexual encounters and "firsts". Some problems occur when there are no "current" fantasies to remember. And you find your mind drifting back to the past. Body Glamore is a forum for your fantasy, an aid to excitement! Your passport to pleasure is you! You may say, "I was younger then, everyone was doing it!", but that was then and this is now! Wrong! Who says you are any different sexually? You're even better now! You can take a trip anytime with us! We've been and will continue to offer you avenues of excitement. How many times have you watched a movie and blushed at the sex scene? Not because you were embarrassed at what you saw, but that you wished it was you! Well, it can be with a little imagination. It's a fine line that you walk when you realize that your Sexual Fantasies are your actual desires! That's what we're here for! To help you realize your potential, to be creative and inspiring. You don't need a survey to tell you that it makes all the difference. Seek the romance you deserve, your own special Body Glamore!

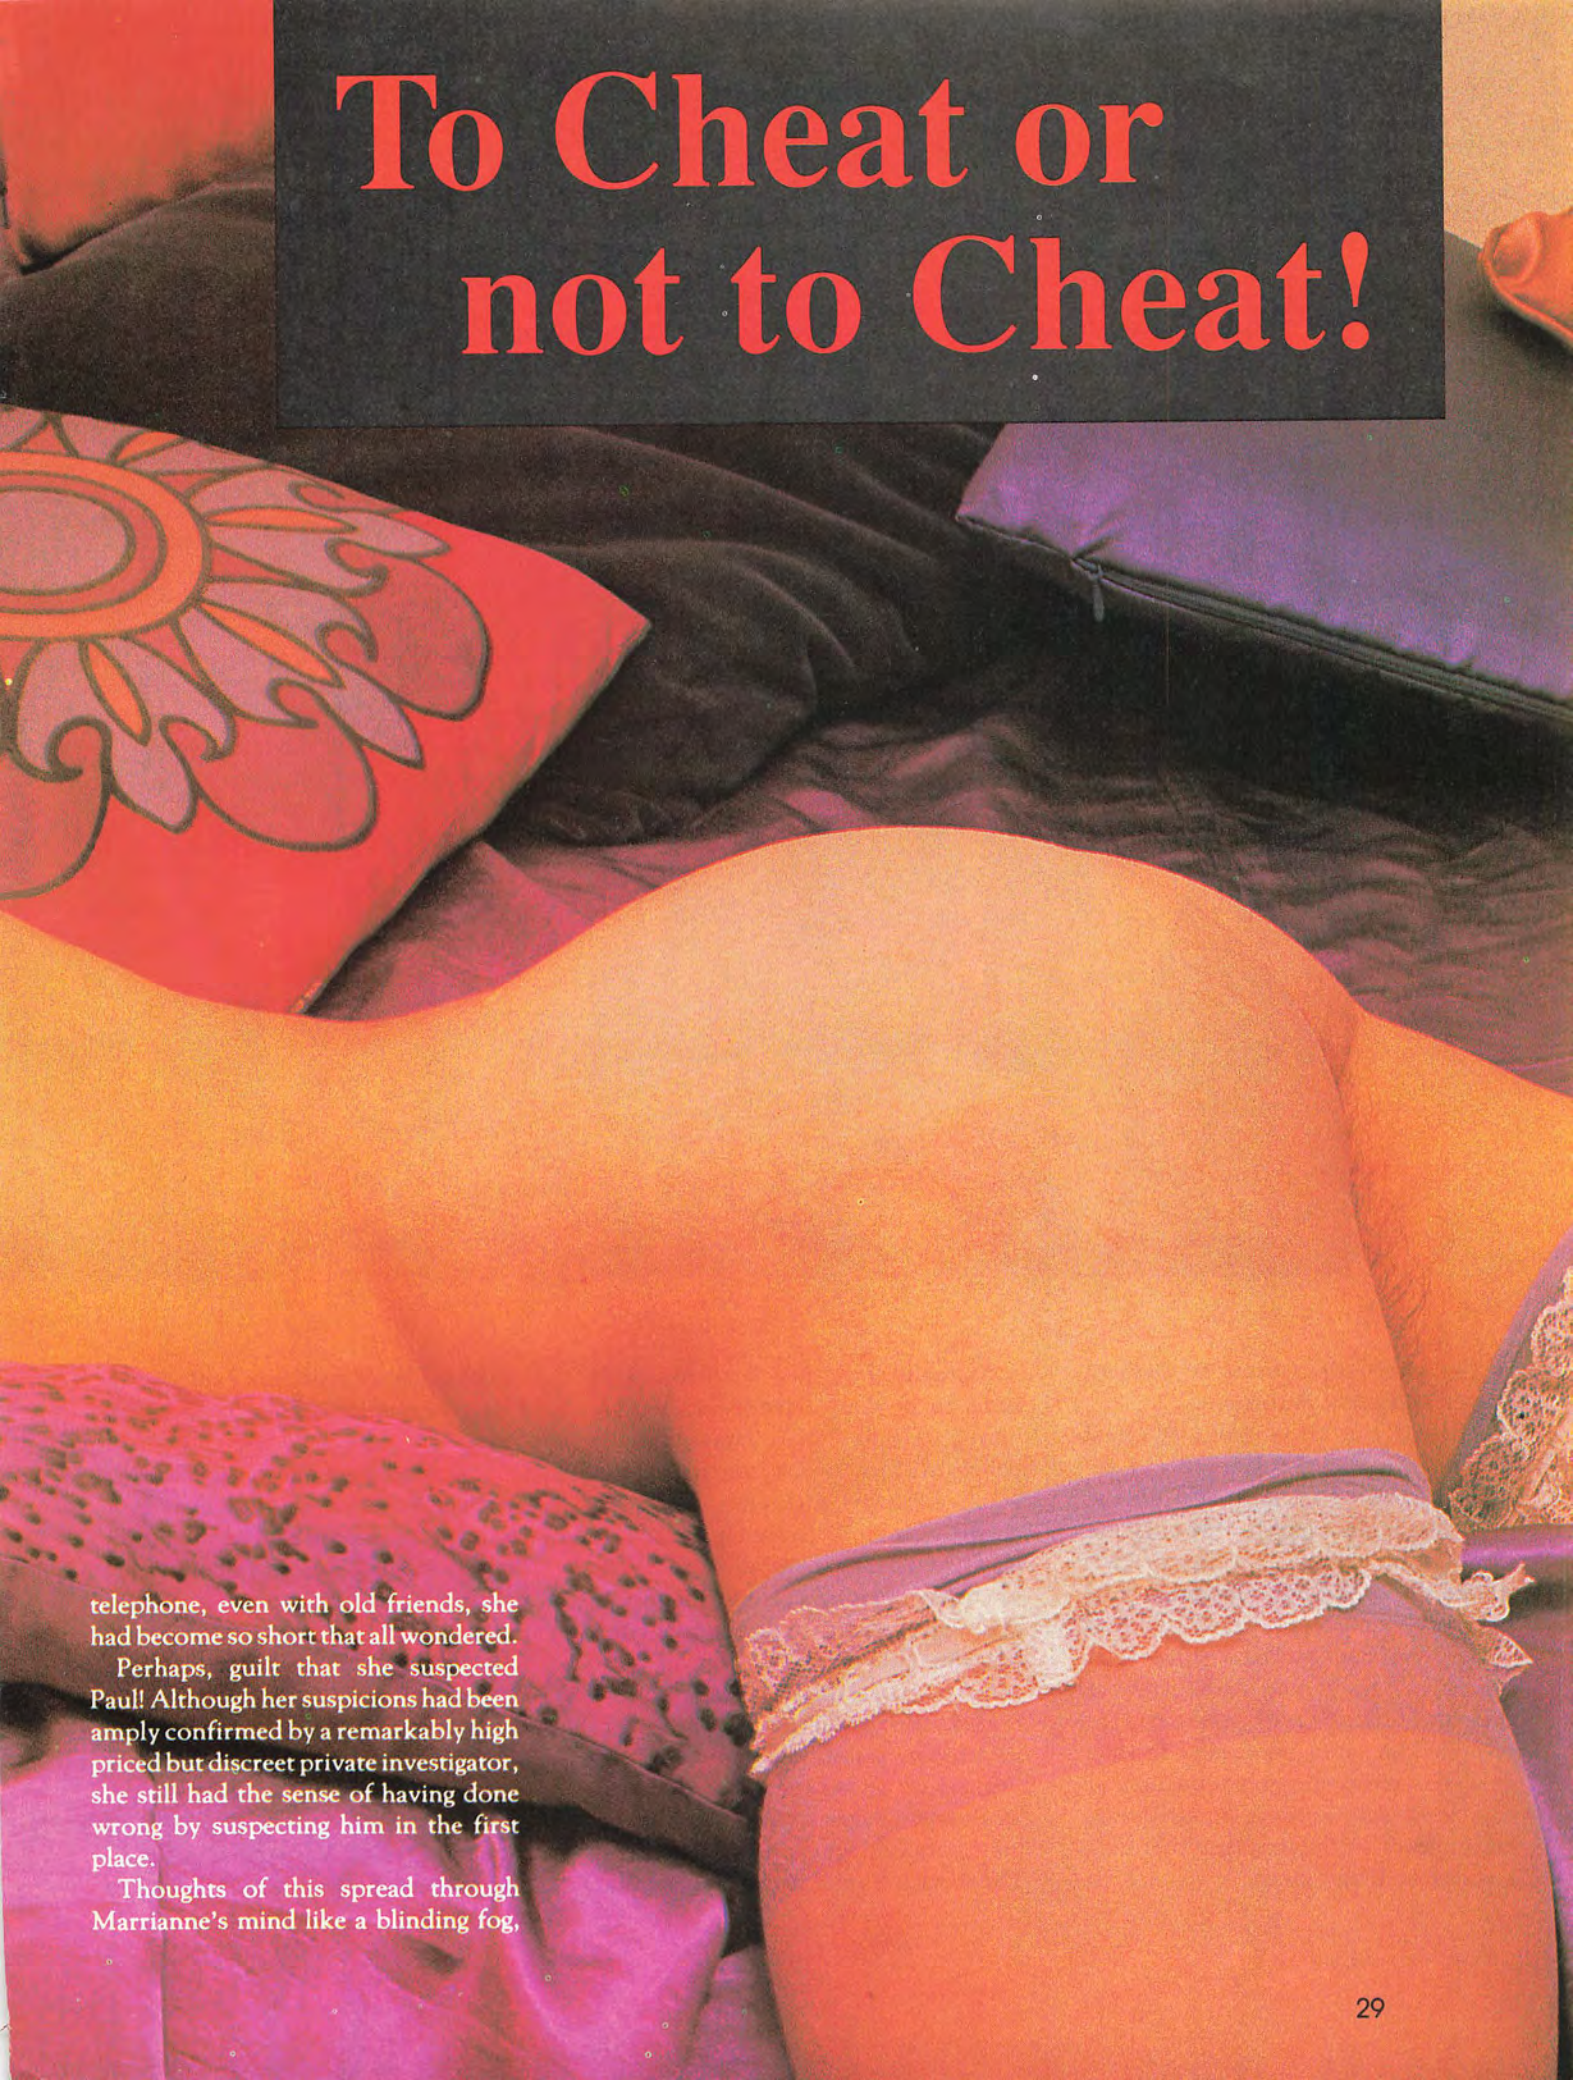

Marrianne was confused and amazed by her own sense of guilt, as she knew that there was no basis in fact for it. Could her own sense of guilt be a reflection from the guilt she knew that John must feel?

Whenever she went from one room to another, she wondered just where the bug was placed in the room; whether, perhaps, even video cameras were carefully concealed. And, on the telephone, even with old friends, she had become so short that all wondered.

Perhaps, guilt that she suspected Paul! Although her suspicions had been amply confirmed by a remarkably high priced but discreet private investigator, she still had the sense of having done wrong by suspecting him in the first place.

Thoughts of this spread through Marrianne's mind like a blinding fog,

Perhaps, the desire to get out of a "hum-drum" lifestyle, or the need to feel more alive urges you forward.

as she sat in the offices of Bergen, Bergen and Dass: Attorneys.

Around the large desk, Andrew Bergen, the attorney who would represent her in court, Arnold Ames the investigator, and herself. Although the information provided was low profile, it left no doubt that infidelity had already become a confirmed tradition in the life of Paul Morrow with at least one lady of his choice. Perhaps, more than one? One was enough however, to provide Marrianne the motivation she needed to terminate a relationship that had long ago become unsatisfying, lacking even in the fondness that long association might incur.

Factually, Paul had been found to have an ongoing relationship with a young (Good Lord, that young?) dancer in a local review, starring nightly at an exclusive nightclub. Well, he could afford it certainly, financially, at least. Marrianne naturally had every intention of using her information, if she must, to win per portion of the finances, properties, which had been common ownership.

Mrs. Adrian Morrow, Paul's mother, so proper, socially prominent, had "squealed" on her son in horror, when local gossip began to seem justified by his hours and unexplained absences. The bearded and hoary explanation "working late!" had been exploded by frequent evening phone calls to his office.

How many ways may one person in a marriage cheat on another? Any professional in surveillance, or any family lawyer, will tell you that the ways are limited, but sub-variations exist. Cheating may be a spontaneous event, or a well-planned, long range affair. It may deprive the spouse of any attention at all, or, indeed, be undetectable, if home relations remain normal. And, it may occur with one of the opposite sex, or, more shockingly, with a new mate of the same gender! Variations, although not numerous, are capable of many nuances.

It starts out casually, and innocently enough, but as time moves on, inner feelings and emotions overwhelm any decision that is logical.

"No-fault" laws have reduced investigations to a degree, as such information is no longer required to get one half of the property, but reasons still exist for surveillance. Often, one partner will be obsessed to "know"; perhaps, to salve their own conscience for bringing a divorce action? For breaking up a home?

And guilt by association!

Other reasons may exist of course. Custody of the children, perhaps, or fixing the blame for the sake of friends and associates.

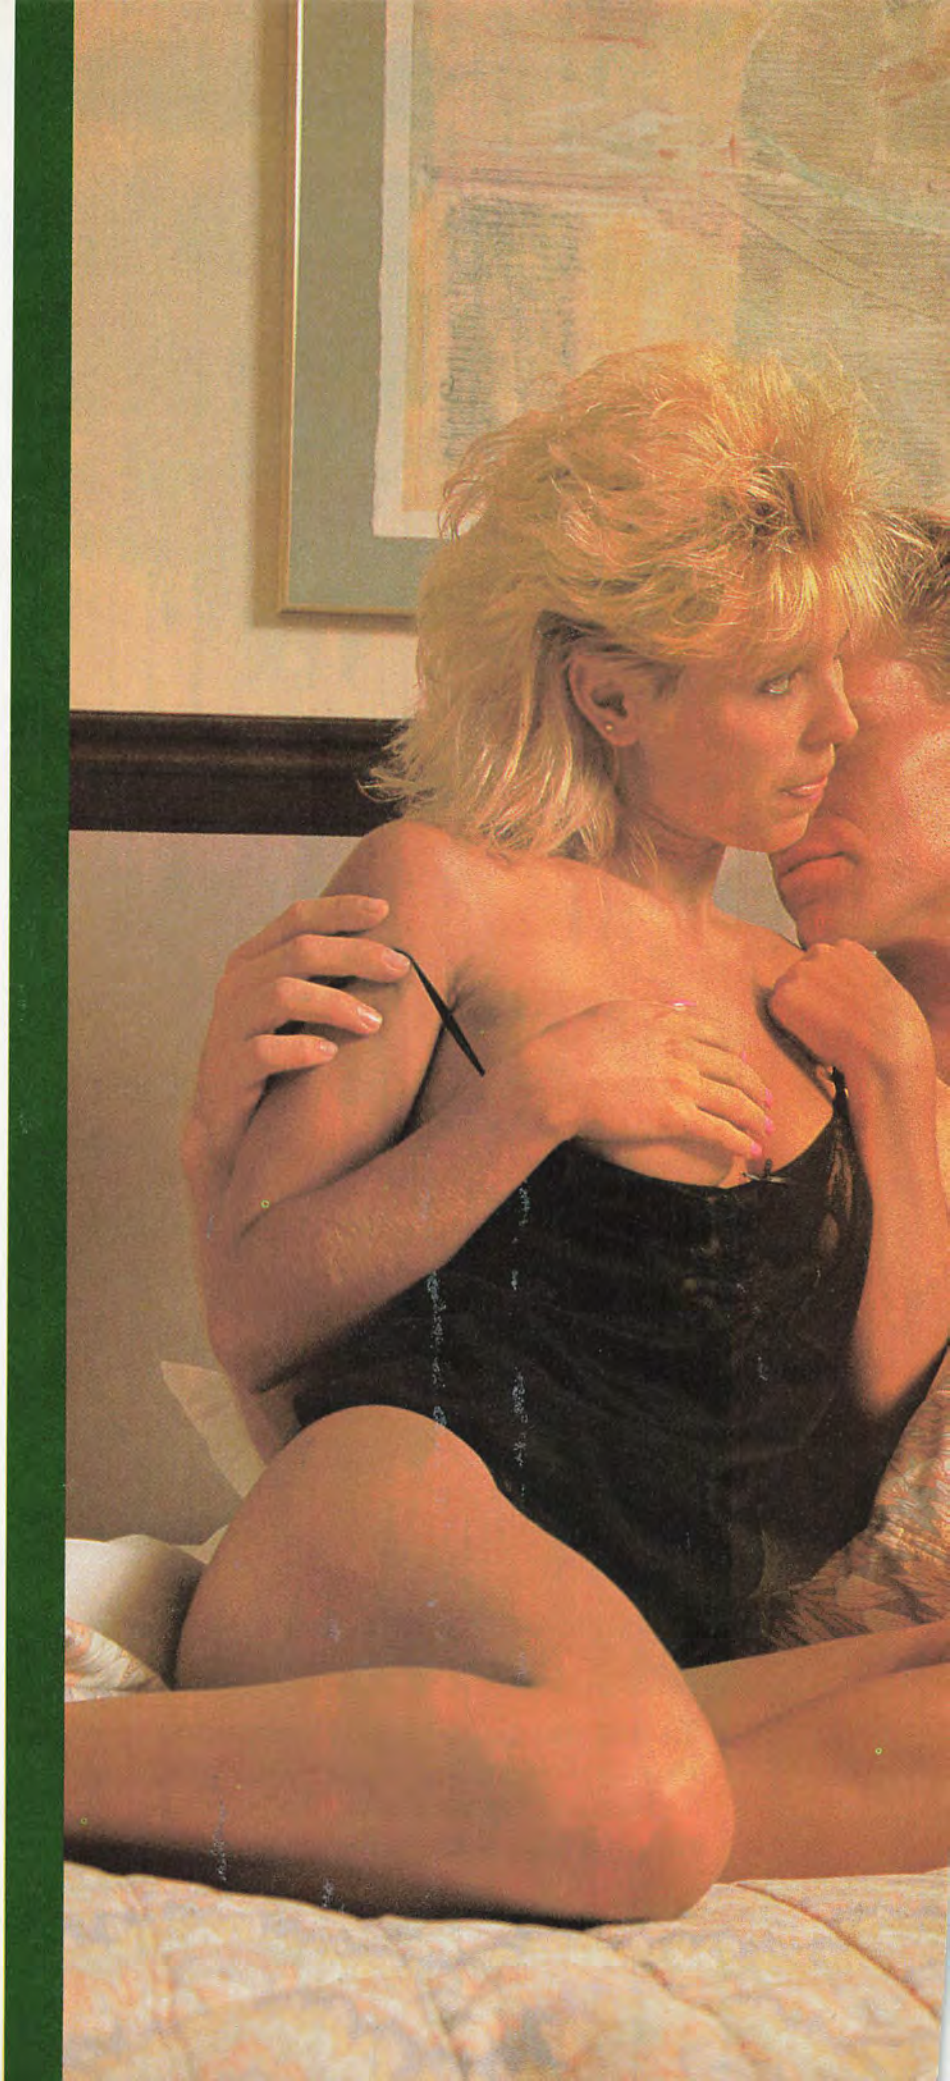

The husband who plays the field, or indulges in only an occasional amour, may bitterly protest a divorce. Home may be his castle, and properties which at least seem his, will be divided irrevocably.

The Investigator who will reminisce, may tell (sans names, of course) of wives, or husbands, who insist on coming along, to see proof of infidelity with their own eyes. Or, wives or husbands who have their "extra-marital mates" followed, to be sure of their faithfulness. The "tragi-comedy" of infidelity, or suspicion thereof!

Investigations by competent private investigators do not come cheap. Beginning with electronic sweeps of the home, to assure such as Marrianne Morrow that they are not in turn being monitored, to the use of sufficient operatives that the suspect may be observed under all circumstances, the bills may run into the thousands. The termination of a marriage is a major thing, however, and those who can afford to investigate it seldom hesitate.

Human nature being what it is, perhaps the information garnered is often necessary to excuse, or at least rationalize, the actions of the one who initiated the investigation. Perhaps there is even hope that lurid details of illicit nights (and days) may be found, helping one to accept his or her own infidelities. Their own memories may be less judgmental if they can discover equal or greater dabbling with forbidden fruit, the extra-marital adventure.

Occasionally, a highly volatile situation develops. Proof undeniable may trigger violence in some people, and

There are questions about your co-conspirator that you want to ask, but the moment is so special that they simply melt away. Everything is in a suspended state until the ecstacy passes.

once triggered, violence may not be highly selective of its target. Violence itself may assuage the feelings of outrage, rampant jealousies and resentments. The investigator who wishes to avail himself of his retirement plan must always consider this factor, and handle facts and reports in as safe, low-profile manner as possible. A living thoughtful, careful investigator has many advantages over one who "talked himself to death".

Women, young and not-so, are infiltrating the ranks of Private Investigators, as they seem to be doing through-out society. And, with equal success! Their ingenuity seems boundless. Acting talents may be used as their principal stock-in-trade, or endless variations of make-up and appearance. For the present, at least, they are less suspect, which is to their advantage. If their numbers continue to increase they may lose this anonymity, this advantage, and become more frequently suspect.

Although legally oriented, their scams and cons often prove effectual when more traditional methods would have accomplished little. Doubtless, they do have a future in investigatory techniques, particularly perhaps, where family problems exist. If they are willing to utilize their own charms, they may often lead a man into indiscreet disclosures, while retaining skill in extricating themselves from the situation which they have created.

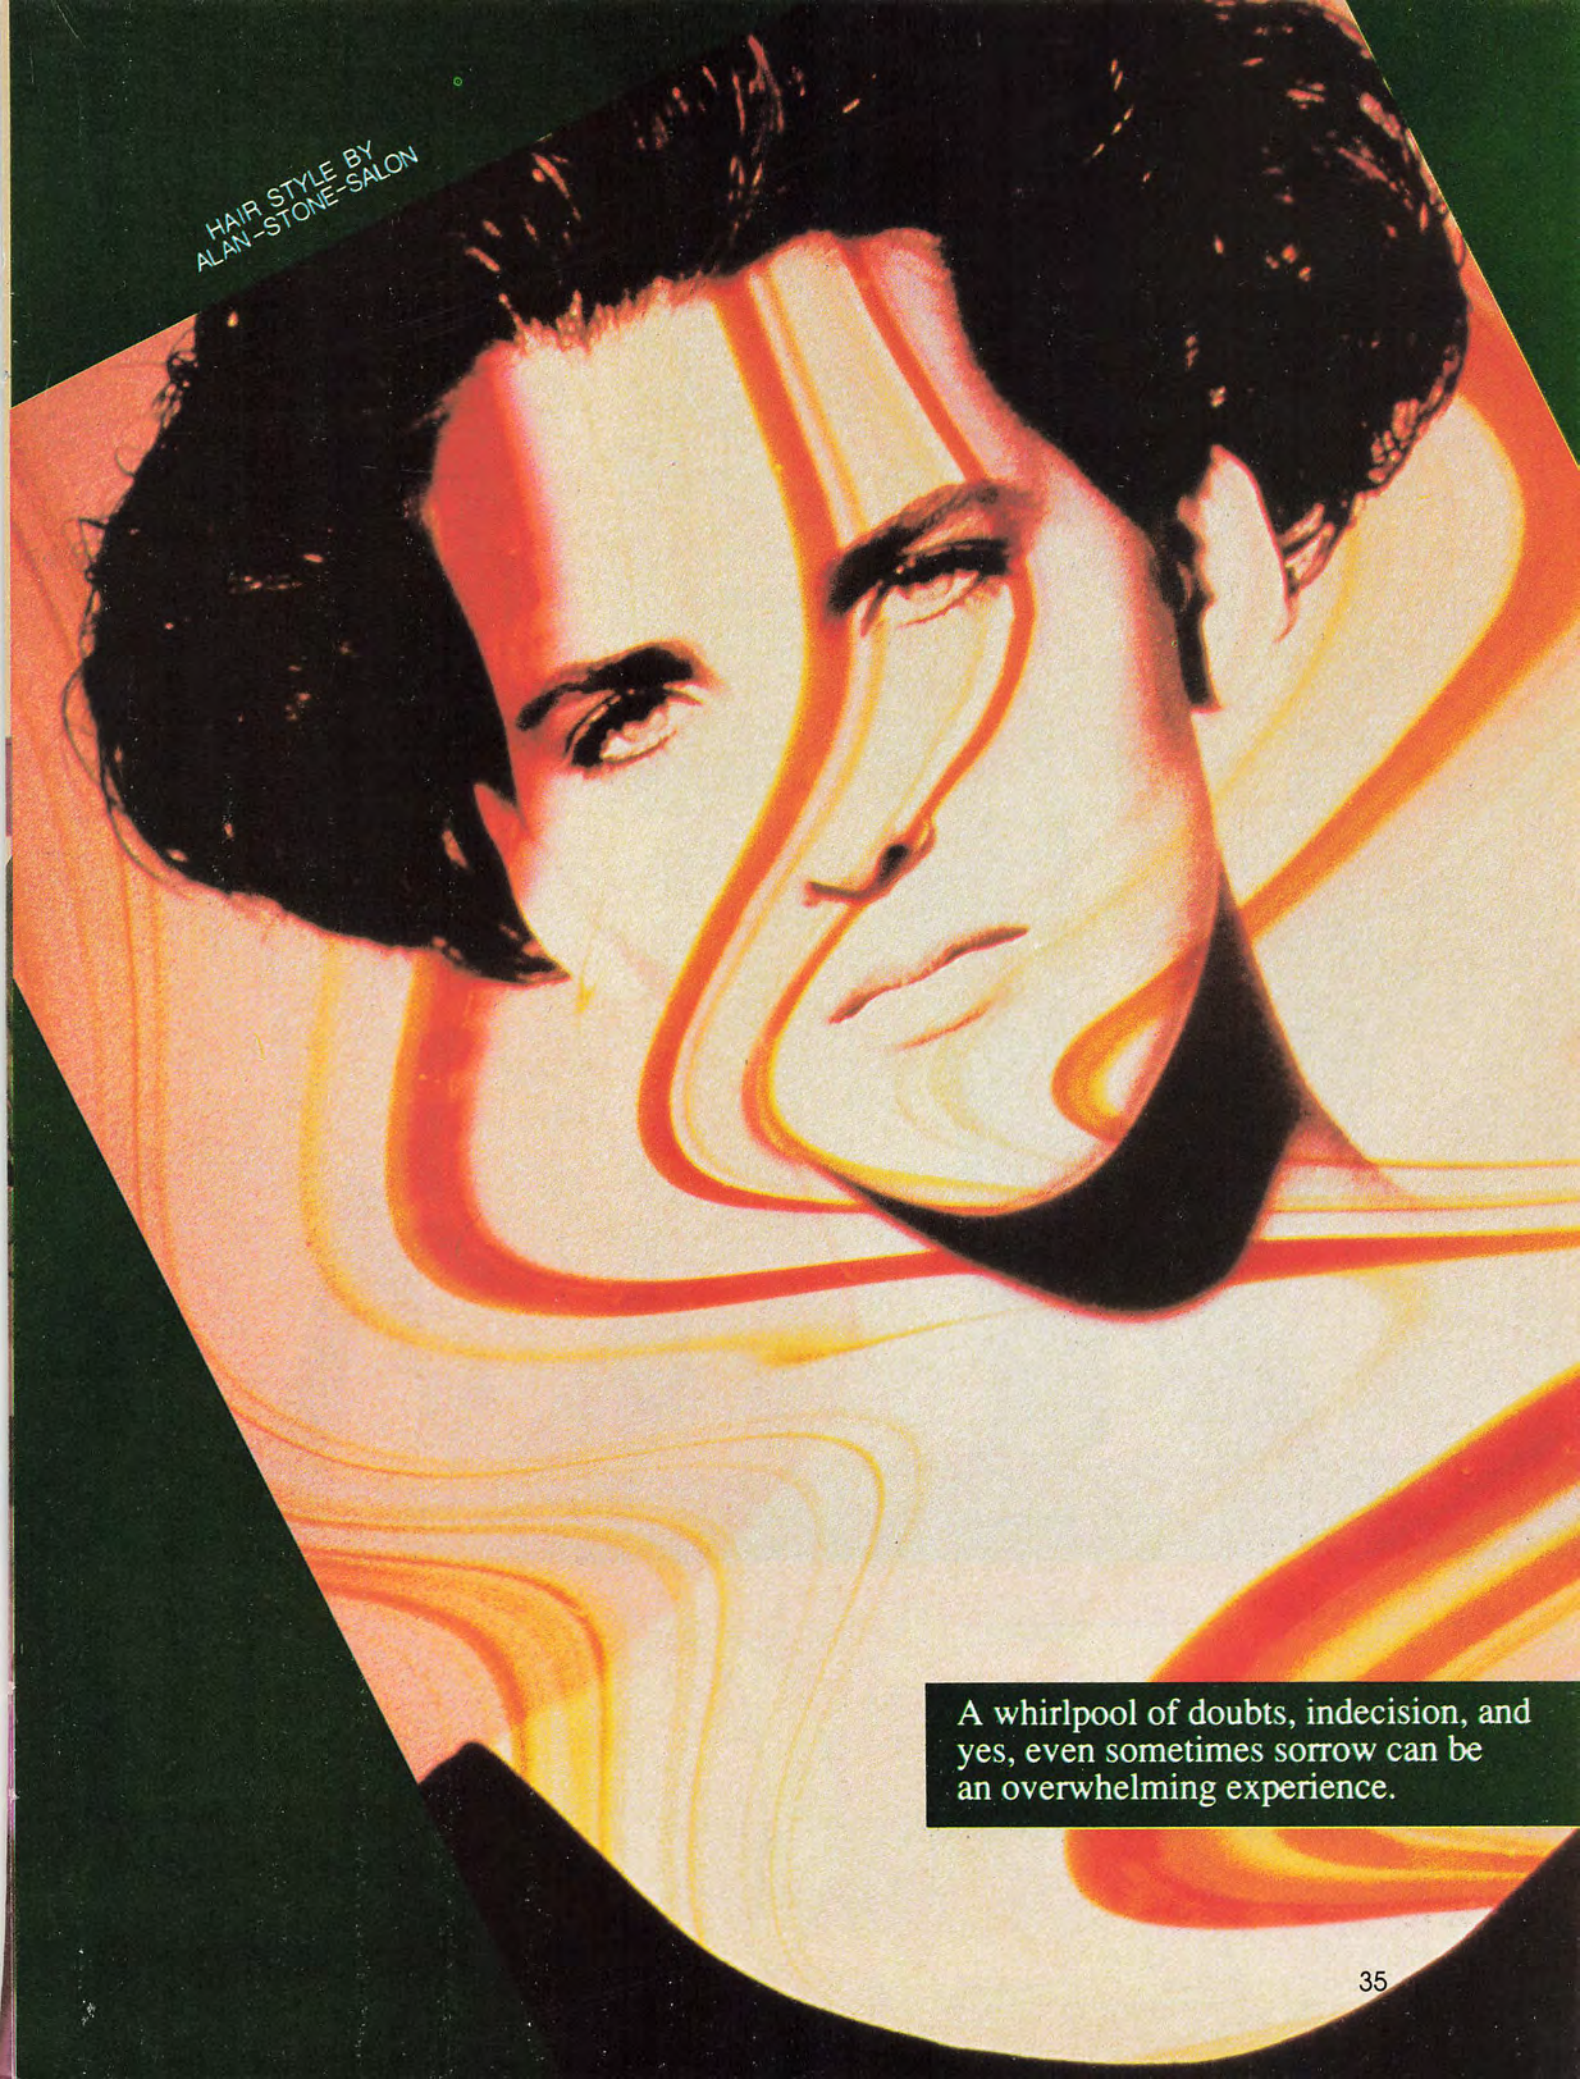

Are investigations justified? The possible answers are probably as numerous as the reasons for initiating investigation. At one extreme, the person who sincerely needs the development of sufficient information to get a just settlement, to the other, the "kinky" partner who is actually sexually stimulated by knowledge, and details, of the other partner's infidelities.

Certainly, there is a future in developing facts and figures concerning family problems, whether the ultimate purpose by divorce, custody of the kids, legal separation, or reconciliation. The facts, once obtained, become the motivating factors for changes in, perhaps, many lives. The investigator, who acquires these facts, this data, may hope that it will be used wisely for all concerned, but that ultimate use will depend entirely on the temper and timbre of the person who required their collection.

Marrianne Morrow, whom first we considered in this matter, did indeed feel that the development of proof was necessary and helpful, both in making the decisions that she made, in insuring justice for her own needs and interests, and justification in her own mind for the step she took. Always, better to know than to guess, to wonder!

A whirlpool of doubts, indecision, and yes, even sometimes sorrow can be an overwhelming experience.

LEGS.

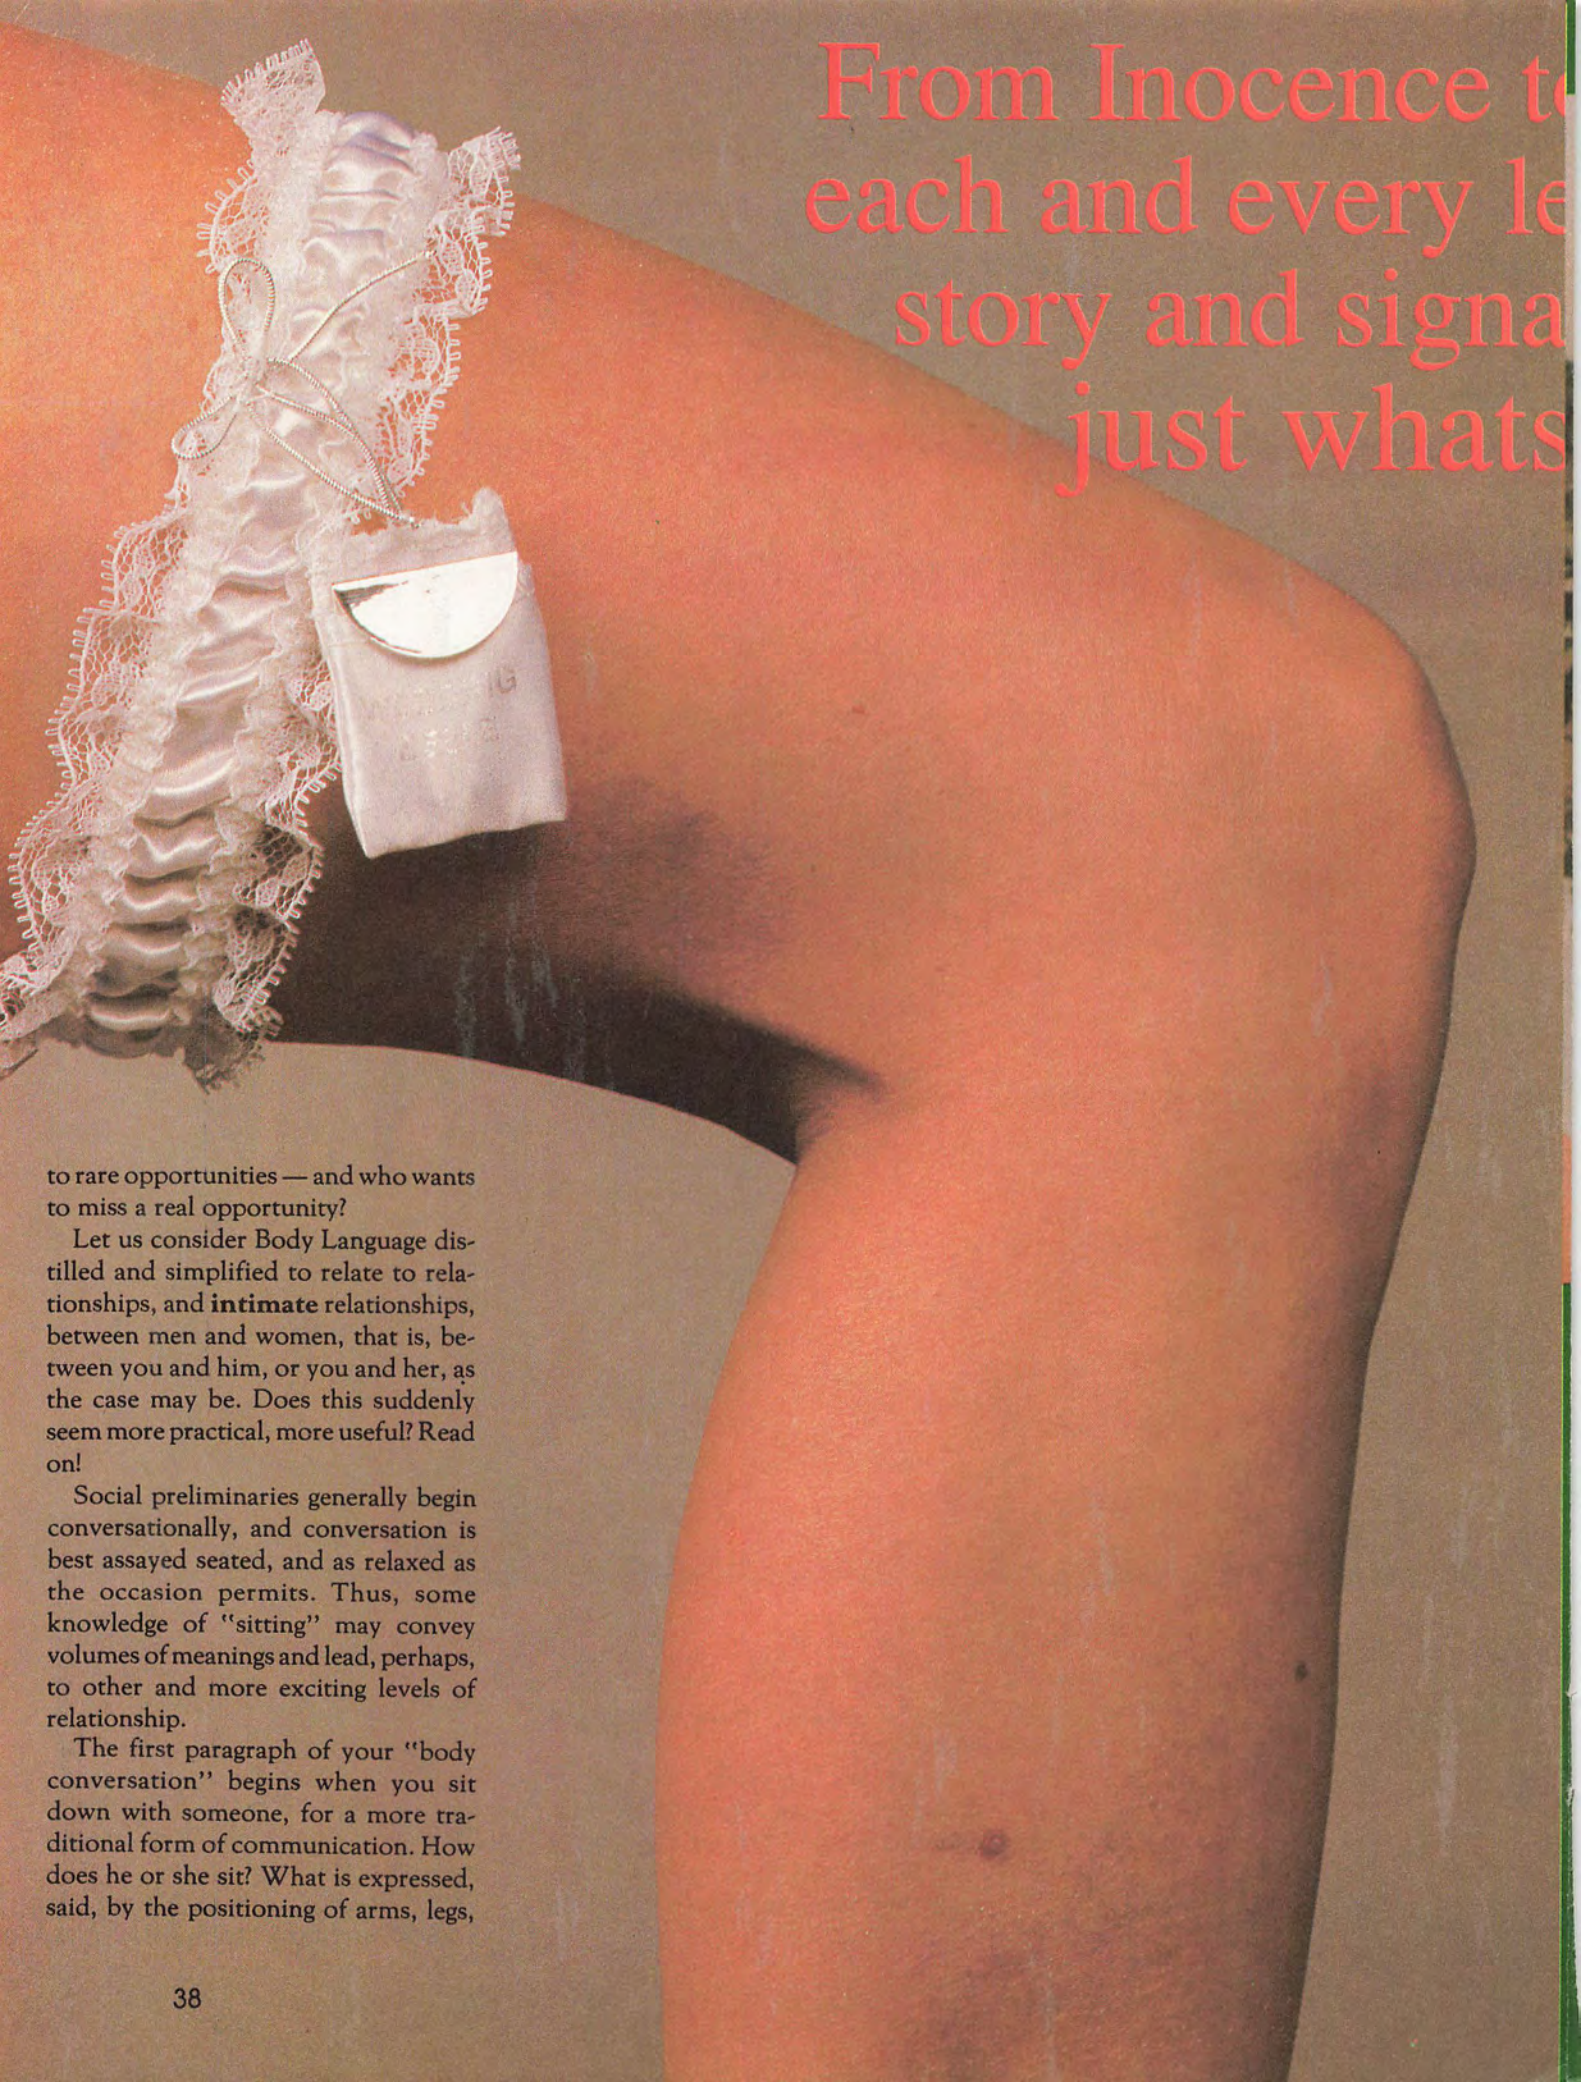

Body Language! Actions speak louder than words!

Much has been heard about Body Language, but to most people it remains a mystery, other than their own sensitive interpretations, sometimes accurate, but alas!, sometimes based on wishful thinking.

Psychologists may include Body Language in their examinations of an individual, but such levels of technology are above and beyond most of us. That is not to say, however, that it may not prove of some use to us.

To simplify, there is a "pigeon-English" variety that may often alert us

From Inocence t each and every le story and signa

to rare opportunities — and who wants to miss a real opportunity?

Let us consider Body Language distilled and simplified to relate to relationships, and intimate relationships, between men and women, that is, between you and him, or you and her, as the case may be. Does this suddenly seem more practical, more useful? Read on!

Social preliminaries generally begin conversationally, and conversation is best assayed seated, and as relaxed as the occasion permits. Thus, some knowledge of "sitting" may convey volumes of meanings and lead, perhaps, to other and more exciting levels of relationship.

The first paragraph of your "body conversation" begins when you sit down with someone, for a more traditional form of communication. How does he or she sit? What is expressed, said, by the positioning of arms, legs,

o Worldliness,
g tells its own
ls the looker

hands? What sentences issue from the position of the head, and its actions?

Initially, relative positions may tell much. Try to be the first to be seated, giving you the opportunity for first conclusions, as well as hiding from the other your own attitudes, which you may not be ready to disclose!

Does this other person sit down close, indicating immediate interest? Or distant, indicating distrust, or at least reserve? Or, close enough to say "wait and see"? The angle of the body; does it seem to give you the advantage of the doubt, or does it indicate a fondness for some other place at the moment?

Are the hands relaxed and serene, indicating trust, perhaps willingness for whatever, or, do they seem to move eagerly toward you, or, worse yet (or better?) do they tend to fly away like restless butterflies?

But no communication media is complete, unless it gives us an opportunity to read between the lines! Those are the words and phrases that we are most anxious to hear.

And so to the legs, the keepers or tellers of secrets.

If the legs are crossed, are they crossed toward you, indicating a willingness, or at least a potential, to open? Or are they crossed away from you, showing that whatever the nature of the conversation may be, there is to be no action. Such a message may be a challenge, however. Perhaps, you may be able to rewrite the ending of the plot!

If the legs are slightly open, and toward you, it may mean "maybe", or perhaps "possible but not probable". A wider positioning should indicate strong possibilities for further adventures! And, a wide position translates as "Your place or mine?"

Other messages just as important (?) may be conveyed by body language, so let us continue our simplified vocabulary.

Let's consider the person who leans back in a semi-reclining position. Does this indicate an actual desire to recline? Sorry! Not likely. More likely, it says "I'm so in control here that I don't need to react to the situation". Such

ENJOY!

The possibilities are endless.

Bare legs can reveal the animal hunger that can be aroused at anytime when the right partner is found.

Every girl will, sooner or later, ask her intimate partner what he thinks about her. Many times his response starts out with, " You've got great legs!" Why are legs so important. It's obvious that a good pair of legs is more important than a pleasing smile, or a nice personality.

assurance generally means a genuinely stubborn person, who just doesn't give a damn what you think. Unless a change of attitude occurs, strike that name off your mental "Little Black Book"!

Some people sit forward, eager, as they ready to jump into action, or go into orbit. If you want to see where such a relationship leads, be sure you are ready for a fast trip! He will promptly ask for your phone number, or a date. She will likely give her phone number quickly, or accept that invitation to a date. Such people often move through life, and relationships like a pinwheel. Before you pursue such an adventure, be sure it's what you want!

More hopefully, there is the person who sits relaxed, both feet comfortably on the ground (or floor, of course). Their EQ (emotional quotient) is high, but stable. They are not ready to jump in bed, but, neither are they ready to read you out of their lives. As before, the leg-angle tells you of the degree of interest, as well as changing moods in this respect. It may well Q your conversational gambit effectively. The "Silent Response"! Such people have the potential of becoming caring, dependable as well as exciting companions. But remember, leg-angle always tells how open (as well as how broad) minded they are.

Hands in lap? For a man this seems quite effiminate, but it is not necessarily so. It may reflect much early rigorous discipline, when politeness, rather than courtesy, was the desired goal. Also, in the interests of peace, this person may fabricate fictional responses. The "form" is dear to him or her, rather than the substance. Time may tell of more endearing traits, however.

If hands seem to linger to shield "Those Places", and your best efforts fail to dislodge them, you are almost sure to be wasting your time. For either an intimate relationship, or a game of bridge.

Then there is the he or she who's hands almost always seem to be kept out of sight. Unless you can achieve a miracle and cause those hands to reach out, the situation is hopeless. Shy? Perhaps! But there is also the possibility of one who just isn't fond of people in general, and who may flare up unexpectedly. So who needs it?

Not "Pigeon English" but "Pigeon Body Language"! Try it. If it works, learn the whole language. There are enough hints here to open up other's thoughts and attitudes to you, if you are observant.

OH, THOSE BE

AUTIFUL LEGS!

Making LOVE to Yourself...

There is someone who knows you best! There is someone who knows best how you respond, physically or mentally (which includes sexually, of course). There is always someone with you when you need them most. And that someone is you. The one person who can always be tolerant, patient, can always take time to be whatever you want to be, including your own sexual partner.

The Western World is rife with taboos concerning this practice, and their origins are very uncertain. Perhaps, somewhere, sometime in antiquity, it was important to tribes to encourage population explosions, to outbreed their war-like neighbors. Who knows? However, whatever the source or sources, and despite lip service, Sexologists figures expose a likelihood of 93% of all women, 97% of all men, enjoy the "solo passion" all, or part of the time. No known facts, medically or psychologically, militate against this practice, although repressions incurred in childhood may be difficult to dispense with.

However, in this age of AIDS, as well as a plethora of other infections, sense must prevail over nonsense. Preferable, of course, is an affectionate, understanding, monogamous partner. But they don't grow on trees! And pick-ups, perhaps exciting for the moment, may well prove to be slow suicide!

What recommends self-sex, masturbation? First, of course, the pure sensual pleasure always at your finger-tips (!). After a hard day, or during a hard day, or any other type of day, for that matter. And, you don't need a partner to do it, although, that possibility offers further exciting avenues of experience. Once both minds are opened and embarrassments are disposed of, this can greatly enhance the possibilities of pleasurable excitement. This practice can help you to discover just what feels best, what stimulates most, what offers the deepest satisfactions. Supposing that you do have, or later acquire a satisfactory, monogamous partner, this knowledge, shared without shame, may encourage and enable a truly outstanding, satisfying relationship. And a truly paramount consideration is that you are free of any infectious exposure.

How does one experience the solitary passion? How many people are there? There is no set rule, no rule of thumb (no pun intended), no one method best for ALL.

If this be madness, is there method to it? A method for each, but no method for all. An almost infinite variety of positions, touches, movements, pressures, exist, not to mention a variety of sexual "toys" which may be readily procured and employed.

It's preferable to finish with orgasm, both from a health standpoint, and satisfaction, release. But don't overlook the journey! Research your own responses, your own sensations, and learn your own best techniques. Don't hesitate to adventure amongst your own feelings, and carefully file results away in your memory banks.

For some, men and women alike, the whole body will be to a greater or lesser degree involved. Others will relate only and strictly to the genital area. Rubbing, thrusting, pulling, squeezing, inserting all offer their own varieties of sensations — experiment. Are two hands better than one? Or does this introduce a distraction? Do objects provide better stimulation? How about streams of water from a hand-held shower, steady or pulsating? Should movements be slow and sensual or brisk, even vigorous? Or does the tempo quicken during the progress of masturbation. And, is once enough? There is no one right way for all, techniques, preferences, are endless. It is for each to find the ideal pattern, the unique method of self-stimulation which results in self-satisfaction!

Among the toys available, vibrators are best known, and come in "His" and "Hers" models. Their use may greatly increase pleasure and satisfaction for one person, and be a "turn-off" for another. Various organic replicas are advertized, and while perhaps exciting in the advertising, rarely prove to be in practice. However, there again — ! Experiment, if you wish!

The whole process of self-stimulation may be carried out against a background of pure fantasia. Situations, actions, procedures which would never be considered in real life, may be indulged in during self-stimulation. For some, it may provide the cream, the drama that makes it meaningful and complete. Another may find that the physical sensations alone are sufficient.

Memories of particularly fulfilling sexual experiences may be relived many times, providing on-going inspiration long after the event itself. Both men and women often find this exciting, fulfilling. Provided, of course, that your experience has included such an event!

Fantasy-wise, one may indulge in varieties of experience that would be difficult, embarrassing, or socially unacceptable in real life. Partners otherwise unacceptable, methods equally unacceptable, may be indulged in fantasy-land of self-sex. Is this commendable? Perhaps not, but on the other hand, there is little to say against it, also. Our own creativity has free reins in this area, and there are no real limits. Hopefully, "Thought-Police" will never get a handle on this particular area of experience.

Solo or not solo? Two (or more?) can share the experience. The sharing may be direct, through observation, through shared practices, or, in retrospect, in shared ideas and conclusions. Whatever degree of sharing is acceptable to those involved should increase potentials of excitement, pleasure, fulfillment. It isn't wise to press the point beyond the acceptances of one of the partners. Maintain the pleasure principal as the ideal, rather than reaching for shock value. The aftermath brings little satisfaction to anyone concerned. Of course, you may best enjoy a totally private and secret world in this respect. It is your own choice.

But if you choose to share, a few hints may provide, not a road may, but a sense of direction, at least. And so:

1. Go slow. Proceed with all due caution. Make sure that your sharing is acceptable, desirable, to the other person. You may open up a shared wonderland or a can of worms. Make sure which, before becoming too committed.

2. Try to see the experience from the other person's viewpoint. Would you enjoy hearing someone make the disclosures that you are making, or would it be embarrassing?

3. Remember that however much you have the right to enjoy your own practices, you do not have the right to share, if such sharing constitutes an embarrassment, or an invasion of privacy.

4. Be selective. Be highly selective. Your effort to share this ultimately private and personal part of your life may prove to be a tremendous turn-on to the right partner, leading who knows where?

In conclusion: HAVE FUN!

Everyone has a private, secret world that can be shared by no one else. Even the most intimate relationship cannot take the place of it, and eveyone sooner or later escapes to his or her own private sanctuary of emotions.

Of course, special situations arise when you can share your fantasies both physically and emotionally with another.

Even the most outgoing personality will challenge anyone who dares to invade their private moments when they want to explore that repressive side to their nature, and explore their sexual fantasies.

What turns a man on...

Advice from the Experts

Even the experts, who often seem to "know it all", have little understanding for or explanation of man's sexual drive. It follows no standards, it often gives no indications. It doesn't seem to be geared to either health level or life style. And it certainly is not detectable in the appearance. The matinee idol may have little or no sex-drive. The ribbon-clerk may be a Man among men.

Certainly, the differences are very marked! And the differences consist of more than frequency or urgency. One man may be immediately turned on by almost any sexual reference. Another man, equally virile, may be turned off by explicit sexual references.

One many may find that his physical nature is an hour-glass that says "Now!". Whatever course his fancies may follow, it is still the physical organism that become ready, and informs him so.

Another man may find that the physical body responds little until urged and inspired by the fancies he indulges in, or is exposed to. Each may be equally capable, but achieve results through entirely different approaches.

These two men represent the mechanical response — when a given amount of time has passed, the light turns green, and the man who responds not to time but to situation and inspiration.

Excitment is the casual exposure of yourself in an environment of trust and mutual respect.

One mate may be most pleased by predictability of performance, practical enough to find this a convenience. Another, perhaps more romantic, may prefer a mate who may be encouraged by affection, loving. So long as mates are compatible in this respect, all is well. But beware incompatibility!

Age may introduce secondary factors regarding a man's typical sexual response, even if the over-all pattern is not greatly altered. Frequency may change, but, oddly enough, either way. Although a decrease in frequency is generally expected, it may not be this way at all! An increase in frequency of sexual activity may result from the greater security time often brings, from shorter hours and less fatique, or because age brings changes to the system of priorities. The "nicities" may assume more interest, time, application. Sexuality certainly has other aspects than the purely physical, and other sources of fuel. Typically, however, the pattern eases, becomes less urgent, with the passing years.

Each man is fully aware of his sexual capabilities, and this knowledge should never be kept from a promising potential partner. Cards on the table may prevent a game highly negative, psychologically perhaps to both people involved.

Since there is no norm, what are the brackets? At what points does little become too little, and much become too much? Or are these even hypothetical? Is capability as important as compatibility, satisfactory performance within the situation? Perhaps not.

Sexologists are accustomed to responses regarding frequency, as well as quality of performance, of extreme variation. One man may be capable of multiple orgasms within one day, or night, and he may even be so virile every day! This is an unusual case, and perhaps not highly desirable, unless one has nothing else to do, and an equal partner, or supply thereof!

A parallel requirement of course, is the presence of a viable erection. While some have little effort obtaining frequent erections, others may achieve the desired condition only with difficulty. Erection, once attained, may last as long as desired, or it may soon begin to fail, if not all the time, perhaps at times. As distressing as they may be, the mate should understand that it is normal and does not indicate a loss of interest in the partner. Or at least, does not necessarily indicate such!

With advancing years, of both partners, foreplay may assume more and more importance for the attainment of satisfactory relations. Manual or oral foreplay may greatly increase the satisfaction of one or both partners. And, if the performance is rather brief, a period of afterplay may prove to be the proof of the pudding.

One man interviewed, was asked if he could always count on an erection. His response was enlightening. "Absolutely! Most of the time!"

Years may bring greater virility, so don't be discouraged. Often the young man, shy and insecure, finds that his body is as confused and unsure as his mind and emotions. Hopefully, he will go on to positive experiences which build his self-confidence, his ego, and lead to satisfaction and happiness.

In any case, the partner should understand that even the total absence of an erection does not indicate the absence of desire. Many things may, on occasion, cause temporary impotence: fatigue, embarrassment, state of health, even unsureness as to the safety or privacy of the location. As human nature is so contrary, however, lack of adequate privacy may prove stimulating to some, either man or woman, and so enhance the performance. To some, any environment is satisfactory, while others will be greatly influenced by an appropriate environment and time. Security is necessary to some, and of little or no consequence to others.

It is often said that sex is a matter of the mind. In a sense, true, but the performance requires that another member be ready to co-operate with mind. And it won't always do so! Even fondest fantasies may reflect nothing but a limp member! On the other hand, fantasies, once desirable or necessary, may eventually detract from the purely physical nature of stimulation required. Sorry! There are just no pat answers.

The mere fact of man woman place and time do not necessarily create a sexual opportunity. While some men are satisfied with most any partner, others are very choosy. And, over a period of time and experience, one who was once a deeply cared for partner may become objectionable, a real turn-off! A harping, critical wife can be a real drag where the sex life is concerned, and not just temporarily but permanently, at least where she is concerned. A wife who no longer cares for her appearance, her cleanliness, can also direct the passions away — perhaps, to someone else. Is it any wonder?

"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." Was this originally said in reference to Jack's performance in bed? Perhaps not, but you can bet that it is equally applicable. When hours stretch too long, too tedious, then sleep becomes the primary need, not sex. When a man realizes that his sex life is slipping away because of his ambitions, he should take stock, examine his priorities, and be sure that he is not making a mistake that he will later regret.

Anxiety and guilt, two more anti-aphrodisiacs! If they cannot be disposed of by better understanding, they may pose long-term problems. If the causes are cleared up, it may still take a while to return to normal.

The woman should always be made to understand that a loss of ability does not reflect against her (that is, if it really doesn't). A good erection has become the symbol for desire. It ain't necessarily so! It may be, or, the symbol of need, the biological clock alarm has just gone off. But the absence does not mean a negative reaction. Desire may be rampant, yet accompanied by inadequacy.

Worse yet, the anxiety that often accompanies this situation may result in a prolongation of the condition. It's best in this case, to admit to temporary inadequacy, get busy with other projects for a few days, and come back, hopefully, renewed. With any luck at all, a long-term problem may be prevented.

Variety exists in the actual schedule of performance, also. Time, for instance! Some men, particularly young, inexperienced men, may come to orgasm so quickly that they scarce have time for penetration. An experienced partner at this time can literally be worth her weight in gold. By timing the action she can help to prolong the act; also, she should help to quell the anxiety that results from feelings of inadequacy.

Other men may require a long period to accomplish climax. With a compatible partner, how lucky these men are! For pure sensual bliss, nothing equals a leisurely, well-timed period of love-making.

And then, some few men seem so well in control as to be able to react to any circumstance. They seem to instinctively fulfill their love-partner's every expectation. Is this the result of experience, or a natural ability? Perhaps either. With so few such Lotharios in the world, little research has been done.

Too big? Too little? And should this be a source of pride, or, alternatively, a source of anxiety? Other factors must be considered in each case, of course. Compatibility. Comfort of partner, or negatively, disappointment of partner. A very small penis may be the source of so much shame and embarrassment that the owner will shy away from sexual involvements, including marriage. This is regrettable, and should be resolved professionally, if necessary. On the other hand, the owner of an excessively large penis may be conscious of hurting his partner, and this is hard to brush away, if it is fact. With luck, or perhaps effort, he may find the ideal partner in all respects, and be happy about the whole thing(!). If a love-partner satisfactory in other respects is found, it may be time to explore the possibilities of alternative methods of sexual gratification. This will depend of course on the individuals involved.

How interested is the average man in the woman's response, her ability to also achieve climax? If the occasion, or the involvement is casual, likely there will be little interest. He will probably be more interested in his own satisfaction.

However, as and if the involvement deepens, becomes more caring and sharing, then the partner's satisfaction becomes of paramount importance. Or at least it should, if the relationship is to be lasting. But, some men may not even be aware of the woman's response. Perhaps he is too involved with his own sensations, or perhaps he has a partner who shows little reactance at this time. Communication should be improved! If caring really exists, the man will desire that his partner be equally pleased with the "outcome". Not all women however, will achieve orgasm, or perhaps only rarely do so. This doesn't mean that there is no enjoyment, or satisfaction. That depends on the individual. The sensations, coupled to the closeness, the sharing, may be more satisfying to one partner, than multiple orgasms may be to another.

Some women may fake climax, either to seem a more desirable, exciting partner, or, for the happiness and peace of mind of her lover. Good communication would make this condition unnecessary, and should do so immediately. The woman doubtless knows her own body well enough to know what the magic combination is. Don't be afraid to ask. It will let her know that you genuinely care! And, don't be afraid to experiment. Even excellent can be improved.

The man who cares for his partner must make sure that adequate communication exists. He should not be afraid to ask, to talk about any aspect of their shared sexuality. If the woman is at first shy and uncommunicative, she will soon be impressed by her partner's sincerity, and respond. Good relationships may be made excellent, and excellent, out of this world. Free, open frequent communication is the key to this. Either partner capable of initiating it should never delay. Communication may well come to be the return trip ticket to Eden!
